The 5-mile strip of land between Bulgaria's primary border and the main frontier with its southern neighbors -- a narrow strip of land, which previously separated the worlds of Socialism and Capitalism -- is an environmental paradise, pollution-free with preserved wildlife. The vines here bask in the sun, producing succulent and rich fruit. The first No Man's Land red vintage was born in 1998 in the vineyards thriving in the virgin 'no man's land' strip between the state borders.

Classic vinification technology. The grapes were picked at optimal ripeness. Processing relied on technology gentle on grape skins. The alcoholic and malolactic fermentations took place in stainless steel vats under controlled temperature. This wine aims to offer pure fruitiness, a succulent and harmonious freshness along with a full-bodied – although in no way overbearing – taste. A fascinating wine of dark ruby red color.
